under the supposition that it was stolen property.

It seems that the watch and chain were stolen from the room of Mr. Aifred Freeman, in Eldrick Smith's block, last Wednesday afternoon. The boy had made his way into the room during the absence of the occupants, and fluding a gold watch in a drawer, he appropriated the former. Noticing a revolver also in the drawer, he picked it up and fired a shot, it is supposed, at a looking-glass in the room, the ball striking the frame. It is thought that the report frightened the boy and he went away. Persons in the vicinity heard the discharge, but supposing that the noise was caused by some heavy article failing on the floor, they paid no attention to it. All the chambers of the revolver were loaded when Mr-Freeman left it.

THE END OF IMPEACHMENT. CONDITION OF THAD, STEVENS,

What was that important thing you at 6 to when you got there?

I don't know.

What did you understand it to be?

I nuderstood it related to imponchment, only cytically an understanding of it if think it proper.

Q You can give the explanation in direct sweet to the question, "What was the inspect to the question," what was the inspect to the question, or Shook were to THE EXPOST THE CORREPTION INVESTIGATION, &c. [Sportal to the Cincinnati Gazette (Radical.)]
Washington, May 23.

The ARTICLE BY THAD, STEVENS.

Thad, Stevens has written something, but his friends, to whom he has read the manuscript, say it is rather incoherent. It must be said that Mr. Stevens has been in a very feeble condition for the hast four or five days, and mentally is less fit now than at any other time this winter fee doing business. Whether he will aftempt to do anything with the paper be has perpared, which substantially charges high crime and mindemeanor in use of the public partronage, is not known. It certainly is not now in chapt to command a dozen woten in the Louise, and probably not more than one in the Committee.

WHAT THE EVIDENCE AMOUNTS TO.

The Managers do not yet express any pueped to sak further postponement of the vote one the article to before the Senate. Thus for most of the testimony is such as to show that the President's ricends were very busy in his interests, but not of a nature to prove that the Senate was directly influenced.

REPORT BY THE MANAGERS.

WASEINGTON, May 24 —Mr. Butler is pre-When will the Albany parry be on hand for business?" and you understood him to mean Hastings. Witness. Excuse me, if you assume that language is mine. I said it related to imposelment, not that there was something to be done, but what I did not know. I knew the whole subject related to imposelment.

Q. But doing business shows that something was to be done?

A. Yes.

Q. "He will do it," shows that something was to be done which you or Shook could do. Now peay what was to be done?

A. I have answered. I do not know.

Q. What did you understand was to be done?

ADMISSION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

The peneral question of bringing in the Southern States has been a good deal de bated smoog Republicans for the bast three or four days. Gen. Grant and Mr. Coffax both lavor the speedy admission of such as have compiled with the reconstruction acts and can persent acceptable constitutions. There are some persons, however, who profess to believe the true interests of the Republican party will be best subserved by making haste slowly in this matter. The unanimity with which restoration bills have been put through the House may, it is believed, be taken as a general indication of the feeding in the Senate. An effort will producibly be made in that body to morrow to see in the product of the feeding in the Senate will finally agree with the House in ordering a new election in Alabama, but that the other reconstructed States will be admitted before July.

Humorous Incident in the Life of Ed-mund Kenn.

Q. How did be come to you, a stranger, to talk about purchasing Senatore' vote.

A. Became I think be had talked on the subject with another greatleman, who, in the course of a conversation, said be would consult me.

Q. Who was that other greatleman?

A. Collector Smythe. I think that in that conversation may name was mentioned, and in passing the cussom-bouse, by the way, I advised the Collector (I think the advice was concurrent with his view) that he would have nothing to do with the subject. I met this person passing out of the castem house, and he introduced him.

Q. Whee?

A. I think three weeks ago.

Q. Had the Collector talked with you before?

Q. Had the Collector talked with you before? At one-time a quartette of friends dined weekly together, of whom Edmund Kean and Elliston, we think, were two. After dinner, on one dark winter's evening, a hackney coach was called, and the four friends, each sereely carrying a small little which was ordered to be driven to astreet of the Strand, which was not very brilliantly illuminated. When it had reached a gloomy spot, where the gas lemps were wised apart, the driver was toid to halt and open the door, and from the strand, another similarly caparisoned, and another, and another; but these were not all? The flow of mourners continued without interruption, till the line seemed likely to "streech to the crack of doom." The muffled driver stood at the door holding his arm to assist the strange company as they alighted, and bore it for a while but, overpowered at last with fear and horrostran of, shouting for the watch to exorcise this demoniacal procession.

This was a bit of Edmund Kean's wild fun. He had farnished his companions with their funeral gear in the bag. The clocaks, etc., were assumed as they drove along, and the opposite door of the coachwas quietly opened, and the steps let down, before the occupants got out from the other side. To slip unperceived round the back of the conch, and pass nimbly through again and again before the coachwas, who was of the true Jarvey type, could discover the trick, was assay enough to did stagers, and whether they had not "all melted into air, into thin air," before the roused logderry could be dragged from the watch-box, and brought to the scene of action, must be left to the realer's imagination.

"Wait a while," says the policeman;

By the dickering light of the fire burning in the grate I perceived the individual addressed as Jack. It is a Chriese who keeps this wretched hole where one

The room we enter is so low that we are

Jack, the master of the house, jabbers a little English. He inquires of us if we wish to smoke, and points to some pipes, which have aiready been in a thousand courteous mouths, and which he will be happy to offer us, lying on a table between a pile of potatose and a few bits of charcoal. The police officer explains to this devil's tapster that we have come simply to look on.

"Is there no one up stairs?" inquires he "Yes, there is one woman." "Whereabout is upstairs?" sak f, looking around. "Why, there is no staircase."

Jack fetches a little ladder from the yard and piaces it against the wall, where some cate and rate's skins are hanging; he niounts a few steps, and pointing to a hoie in the ceiling, says, "Here."

"There is not room for us all up there," remarks the police officer." "You follow the Chinaman, and I'll wait for you below."

One by one we climb the ladder and low the Chinaman, and I'll wait for you below."

One by one we climb the ladder and mount through the opening. Seated on a mattrass in a room lighted by a dim lamp is an old woman with disheveled white hair, thin face, and dull looking eyes, blowing a cloud of smoke and coughing every now and then like a person in the last stage of consumption. She casts a stupefied gaze upon us, then threws herself back and continues to puff away at her pipe of opium.

The room where she is is a small loft, encumbered with a multitude of objects, belonging to the excellent Jack, but beyond the mattrass on which the old sorceress is reclining there is not a single

The atmosphere is so tainted with opium that, being on the point of anfilocation, I break the only window pane, through which, by the way, a kitten would find some difficulty in passing. The fresh air inundates the room, rousing up the sorceress, who gives vent to a voiley of complaints in an unintelligible jargon. A shilling flung on the unc.ean couch mollifles the old woman, who opeus her eyes to the fullest extent by a superhuman effort. She selzos the coin with her long bony fingers and contempiates it with delight. A new attack of coughing more formidable than the former seems to lear her lungs as we retreat through the little hole and down the ladder steps.
